1.2. Third-Party Code Attribution

The initialization sequence and other elements may contain logic or structure derived and adapted from third-party open-source projects. As such:

All reused code components or logic inspired by third-party projects have been either:

- Licensed under permissive licenses (MIT, BSD, Apache 2.0), or
- Re-implemented with modification and adaptation.

Proper attribution is provided in the `THIRD_PARTY_NOTICES.md` file, including:

- Name of the original project
- Original license
- Link to the source repository
- Summary of how it was adapted or modified

NOTE: Any third-party source files, even partially reused or adapted, are explicitly marked with headers identifying the origin, copyright holder, and license.

2. Intellectual Property and Originality Declaration

The core kernel logic (e.g., memory management, command prompt, bytecode loading mechanism, and the partial Ext4 handling implementation) has been developed specifically for this project and is considered original.

The adaptation process for initialization logic ensured that no proprietary or incompatible license content was integrated.
